

“What is a city but the people?”

About this workshop

The original Bauhaus movement radically influenced architecture, construction, design and art. A hundred years later, the New European Bauhaus aims to answer the challenges of today and to match sustainability with style.

William Shakespeare famously said: “What is a city but the people”. By engaging citizens in the design of our neighborhoods and living surroundings, we wish to use the NEB to build climate neutral cities that also are healthy, sustainable and happy places where people want to live, work and spend their pastime.

This workshop brings together urban actors to exchange inspiring examples of holistic design and to explore how NEB can help urban areas to boost their green transition and to integrate the values of NEB - sustainable, beautiful and inclusive.
